The taxpayer may consequently be assessed in proportion to what he owns, whether it consists of ships, merchandise or houses, and hence a citizen may be assessed by the State where he resides for his right or interest in a vessel, as measured by its market price or value. Taxes, said Clifford, J., levied by a State upon ships and vessels owned by the citizens of the State as property, and based on a valuation of the same as property, are not within the Constitutional prohibition/ The implied restraints on State taxation result from the established principle that the powers of the United States are actual or potentially subtracted from the sum of the powers of the States, and that a State consequently cannot exercise any power however indisputably its own, in a way to conflict with the legitimate exercise of the powers of Congress. It follows that the States cannot tax the property of the general government, nor the means through which the functions of that government are performed. A bank or other corporation chartered by the United States is within this principle, and so are the salaries of the officers and servants of the United States. The question arose in McCulloch tr. the State of Maryland, under a State law taxing the branch of the Bank of the United States established at Baltimore. The power of the States to raise money by taxation is under ordinary circumstances general,...
