Caitlin Press. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 288 pages. Dimensions: 8.9in. x 6.0in. x 0.8in. Since women started working in the trades in the 1970s, very little has been published about their experiences. In this provocative and important book, Kate Braid tells the story of how she became a carpenter in the face of skepticism and discouragement. In 1977 when Braid was broke and out of work, her male friends encouraged her to apply as a labourer on a construction site on Pender Island, off the coast of British Columbia. She had never heard of a woman doing this kind of work, but she was hired because (she later found out) the boss hoped that a woman on-site would improve the men's performance. For the next fifteen years Braid worked as a labourer, apprentice and journeywoman carpenter, building houses, bridges and high-rises. She was one of the first qualified women carpenters in British Columbia, the first woman to join the Vancouver local of the Carpenters Union, the first to teach construction full-time at the BC Institute of Technology and one of the first women to run her own construction company. Though she loved the work, it was not an easy career choice. Slowly she carved a role for herself, asking first herself, then those who would challenge her, why shouldn't a woman be a carpenter. Told with humour, compassion and courage, Journeywoman is the true story of a groundbreaking woman finding success in a male-dominated field. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg, OR, La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
